WRAMP is for female-identifying and non-binary students who are interested in learning about and working on STEM projects. This program exposes high school women to positive female role models who are pursuing STEM degrees at WPI. Two high school students are matched with WPI graduate and undergraduate mentors to work on a project weekly as a team. Participants also take part in personal and professional development workshops designed to build skills, and confidence, while gaining valuable insight into STEM opportunities and college readiness.
